

The Master of Theology degree (M.Th.) is a post-graduate study designed to accomplish mastery of a specific field of study. Graduates will possess advanced knowledge in the field associated with building "biblical theology" and "theology in culture," particularly through substantial implementation in church-based theological education and other ministry programmes. They will demonstrate the ability to solve complex problems, and will think rigorously and independently.

Specific Program Objectives:

- Mastery Scripture using a biblical theology approach, which allows the teaching of the Bible to unfold naturally according to author's intention and literary design with special attention to genre and overarching themes of each Bible book.
- Reflect on the contributions of scholars regarding biblical theology and theology in culture.
- Address the pertinent issues related to biblical theology and theology in culture and analyze Scripture and other contributions related to those issues.
- Formulate conclusions and personal applications regarding those issues.
- Obtain advanced mastery of biblical theology, particularly through study according to the eight canonical sections of the Bible.
- Develop a framework for beginning to use the canonical sections in both life and ministry.

Master's Course Requirements:

- Master's students are held to a very high level of academic rigor and production.
- Master's are required to complete all reading reports, all course projects (more than the bachelor's programme projects), "great book" synopsis, the oral exam, and the summary project (term paper).<sup>1</sup>
